ELEARNINGNEWS ARTICLE

Year 7 - number 259 Wednesday 20 september 2023

eLearning courses: how to create a brand

Let's find out what branding is and how to create a brand for an eLearning course to make it engaging and distinguish it from others

In the ever-changing world of education, eLearning has emerged as a powerful tool for both individuals and businesses. Creating an effective eLearning course is essential, but equally important is its branding to make it engaging, distinguish it from others and able to reflect your identity. This article will walk you through the process of branding an eLearning course, from establishing a brand identity to designing engaging content and ensuring a consistent user experience.

For practical use of the guide, an index is provided below.

1. The importance of branding in eLearning

- What is branding?
- Why a brand for an eLearning course?

2. Understand who your audience is

- Identify the target audience
- Analyze audience preferences
- Create audience personalities

3. Define the brand identity

- Create the brand story
- Choose brand colors and fonts
- Create a unique brand voice

4. Create engaging content

- Storytelling in eLearning
- Design visual elements
- Write engaging content
- Embed multimedia content

5. Develop an easy-to-use interface

- Design easy-to-use navigation
- Choose the right learning management system (LMS)

6. Incorporate interactivity

- Gamification and game elements
- Quizzes and assessments
- Collaborative learning activities

7. Promote your eLearning course through branding

- Leverage social media
- Content marketing

eLearning courses: how to create a brand

- Involve students
- Evolve the brand over time

1. The importance of branding in eLearning

In the rapidly evolving landscape of online education, eLearning course creation and branding have become more crucial than ever. In the world of eLearning, branding is much more than a logo and a catchy tagline. It understands the essence of your course, how it is perceived by students and the impression it leaves on them. Effective branding can help your eLearning course stand out in a crowded marketplace, create a memorable learning experience, and build trust with your target audience. This comprehensive guide will walk you through the process of branding your eLearning course, from conceptualization to implementation.

What is branding?

Branding is the process of creating a unique and consistent identity for your eLearning course. It's about defining the values, tone, imagery and content of the course so that it resonates with your target audience. Effective branding can make your course easily recognizable, memorable and relatable.

Why brandING an eLearning course?

- 1. Differentiation: Branding sets your course apart from others and helps you become a recognizable name in your niche.
- 2. Trust and credibility: A strong brand conveys professionalism and reliability, which can encourage students to enroll in the course.
- 3. Engagement: A well-branded eLearning course is more engaging and can hold learners' attention for longer periods.
- 4. Retention: When learners connect with your brand, they are more likely to return for more courses or recommend your offerings to others.
- 5. Consistency: Branding ensures a consistent look, feel, and message across all course materials.

Now that you understand why branding is crucial, let's see what the steps are to brand an eLearning course effectively.

2. Understand who your audience is

Before you start branding your eLearning course, you need to have a thorough understanding of your target audience.

Identify the target audience

- Define your ideal student: Consider demographics, interests and educational background.
- Conduct surveys and interviews: Gather information from potential learners.
- Analyze market research: Identify eLearning industry trends and gaps from resources available online.

Analyze audience preferences

- Determine preferred learning styles: Find out whether students prefer a visual, auditory, verbal, or combination of these.
- Identify weak points in the subject you teach: What are the main challenges and problems that students face in your subject? What do you propose to make problems easier?
- Assess their goals: What do students hope to gain from taking your course?

Create audience personas

- Based on the information you gather, you can develop detailed student personas. In marketing, personas are fictitious representations of a particular company's ideal customers. Always being clear about who your "average student" is is necessary to make sure your brand connects with your students. For this reason, try to be as specific as possible, looking for information such as age, gender, language, background, study preferences, goals, etc.
- Use personas to inform branding decisions: adapt your brand so that your personas can resonate with it.

eLearning courses: how to create a brand 2/5

3. Define the brand identity

Once you have a clear picture of your audience, it's time to define your brand identity. This process depends both on the information you have accumulated so far about your customers and on your preferences or personal characteristics, however it is possible to identify some salient points that are always essential to remember.

Create the brand story

- Create a compelling narrative: describe why your course exists and why it matters.
- Highlight your strengths: what sets your course apart from others?
- Align your story with learners' needs: Show how your course solves their problems.

Choose brand colors and fonts

One of the processes that online course creators tend to underestimate is choosing an appropriate color palette and font. These small details help students navigate course content more easily (for example, having a small border at the top with the same color on course pages can be an easy way to indicate that content belongs to that course, helping students to navigate better among the dozens of open pages of other subjects). Furthermore, they are graphic details that visually make the difference between an "amateur" and a "professional" course.

- Select a color palette: Colors should reflect the mood and values of the course.
- Choose a font that matches your brand voice: The font you choose is much more important than you think: it must be legible and convey the message effectively. In the case of online courses you often want to express clarity, so avoid fonts that are convoluted or difficult to read.

Create a unique brand tone

- Develop a consistent tone: set the tone of your brand in written and spoken content.
- Align your brand tone with learner preferences: speak their language and address their pain points. If your students are all over the age of 60 you will need to look for a different writing style and site layout for a younger audience. Likewise, if most students only speak English, it is a good idea to ensure navigation on your page that includes information in English.

4. Create engaging content

Branding isn't just about aesthetics, it also involves creating content that resonates with your audience.

Storytelling in eLearning

- Create compelling narratives: use stories to illustrate key concepts.
- Create relatable characters: in some cases and for some audiences it is possible to develop characters that students can connect with.
- Use storytelling techniques: engage emotions to improve learning retention.

Visual element design

- Consistency is key: Maintain a consistent visual style throughout the course.
- Use images: images and icons must support the contents, avoid using images that distract too much from the main content of the slide.
- Ensure readability: Pay attention to the size and quantity of text, contrast and readability.

Write engaging content

• Be concise: avoid long sentences and unnecessary complexity, whether in text, audio, video or image content.

eLearning courses: how to create a brand 3/5

- Use the active form: make content more engaging and direct.
- Incorporate storytelling techniques: use anecdotes and real-life examples.

Incorporate multimedia

- Use videos and animations: visual and auditory elements can increase engagement. A short video from social media can be a great way to start a discussion.
- Create interactive elements: include clickable content and simulations in your course.
- Balance multimedia with text: ensure a mix that suits your audience's preferences.

5. Develop an easy-to-use interface

An easy-to-use interface enhances the learner experience and strengthens your brand. Generally, to create an easy-to-navigate user interface you need to:

Design easy-to-use navigation

- Create intuitive menus and navigation paths.
- Allow both mobile/tablet and desktop use and conduct extensive testing across multiple devices to ensure a consistent experience.
- Allow breadcrumb navigation (navigation links that reproduce the student's path on the website and allow the user to understand where he is, in which section of the portal he is located) and progress indicators.

Choosing the right learning management system (LMS)

- Able to meet your training and branding needs.
- Customize the LMS interface to match your brand colors and logos.
- Ensure an automatic user registration and login process.

6. Incorporate interactivity

Student engagement is one of the main problems of eLearning since sitting behind a screen for a long time without interaction can bore students. As a result, interactivity is an almost necessary element of an online course because it helps make learning engaging. Below are some ways to integrate interactivity into online courses, and there are several ways to integrate them, from using free sites and apps to using LMSs that allow for easy integration of these tools.

Gamification and game elements

- Add elements such as leaderboards, rewards and challenges.
- Set clear goals and rewards for students.
- Use quizzes and gamification.

Quizzes and assessments

- Create quizzes that reinforce key concepts.
- Provide immediate feedback on quiz results.
- Offer students the opportunity to review and retake quizzes.

Collaborative learning activities

- Promote collaboration through projects or group discussions.
- Encourage peer feedback and interaction.
- Use social learning

eLearning courses: how to create a brand 4/5

7. Promote your eLearning course through branding

To promote your course, the main help will come from social media.

Leverage social media

Use platforms like Instagram, Facebook and LinkedIn to promote your course. Share content such as success stories and updates that reflect your brand identity and value.

Content marketing

Start a blog or post valuable content related to your course topic on social media. This way you can not only establish yourself as an authority over time, but also strengthen your brand experience by connecting with other people and attracting attention.

Involve students

Create a community around your course. Engage students through forums, webinars or social media groups. This creates a loyal following and fosters a sense of belonging.

Evolve the brand over time

Branding is not static. As trends change and your course evolves, be prepared to adapt and refine your branding elements, while staying true to your core identity.

eLearning courses: how to create a brand 5/5