Mandatory training on health and safety at work: e-Learning vs. classroom - Infographic

Internet has made knowledge very accessible. Online training for health and safety at work is very convenient. But what role does the classroom now play?

Not everything can be done exclusively online. If we think of training courses aimed at transferring practical skills (such as the use of machinery) it is clear that classroom training is the most appropriate.

A blended solution (mixed classroom and e-Learning) is usually the best for most companies. However, it will be up to the health and safety managers to set up a specific program for their organizations.

What's the secret to manage this issue in the smartest and most economical way? Use online training on health and safety in all cases that allow it and use classroom training for any practical need.

The specificities and differences between online and classroom training are highlighted in the infographic.
